REPLY MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION TO
DISQUALIFY DEFENDANT'S
COUNSEL

Date: March 14, 1983
Time: 10:00 A.M.

22
23 Activision does not deny that the subject matter
24 of this action is "substantially related" to the subject
25 matter of the earlier action in which the Flehr firm repre-26 sented Atari. Activision affirmatively asserts that the 27 American Bar Association Code of Professional Responsibility 28 sets forth basic principles of legal ethics which may be

1 used to interpret the California Rules of Professional 2 Conduct (Memo., p. 2). Thus, the cases cited in plaintiffs'
3 opening memorandum, Trone v. Smith (9 Cir. 1980) 621 F.2d
4 994 and Unified Sewerage Agency v. Jelco Inc. (9 Cir. 1981)
5 646 F.2d 1339, require disqualification here. Faced with 6 the readily apparent conflict problem as well as the contrac-7 tual obligation of its counsel, Activision attempts to rely 8 on a series of technical arguments. None of those arguments 9 is sufficient to relieve its counsel of the obligations
10 created by its representation of Atari. A case relied upon 11 by Activision and decided by this very Court demonstrates 12 the error of many of defendant's arguments In re Airport Car 13 Rental Antitrust Litigation (N.D.Cal. 1979) 470 F.Supp.
14 495).

15 A. THE SIMPLE FACT OF THE FLEHR FIRM'S 16 REPRESENTATION OF ATARI IN THE 17 PRIOR ACTION REQUIRES DISQUALIFICATION.

18 The Flehr firm's present representation of Activision, 19 despite Activision's protestations, is clearly adverse to 20 the present interest of Atari. Atari is a licensee under 21 the patents in suit and has paid $1,500,000 for that license
22 (par. 3.01, pp. 6&7, Exhibit A to Herbert affidavit). Atari 23 considers it to be in its best interests to remain a licensee 24 and not to have the patents held invalid (Paul affidavit, 25 pars. 6&7; Paul deposition, pp. 11-14). Atari certainly 26 believes the Flehr firm's representation of Activision in 27 this action is adverse to it (Paul affidavit, par. 7; Paul 28 deposition, p. 14). Atari clearly has a present interest in

1 seeing that the value of its license is maintained and that 2 other companies in the television game business are also 3 appropriately licensed under the plaintiffs' patents. The 4 Magnavox/Atari license includes a specific provision for 5 Atari's benefit obligating Magnavox to prosecute infringe-6 ment actions as may be reasonably necessary to protect 7 unlicensed competition from materially interfering with the 8 business of Atari under the license agreement (par. 4.02, 9 p. 7, Exhibit A to Herbert affidavit). One of Atari's 10 concerns is that Magnavox monitor and enforce the patents
11 under which Atari is licensed (Paul deposition, pp. 25-27).
12 While Atari may have no right of its own to prosecute 13 actions for infringement of the patents in suit, it has a 14 very definite and readily apparent interest in the success-15 ful prosecution of such actions by the plaintiffs.

16 It has previously been found under earlier A.B.A.
17 Canon Six that a patent licensee has sufficient interest in 18 the licensed patents that his former counsel should not 19 represent a defendant in an infringement action on the same 20 patents. A.B.A. Committee on Professional Ethics Formal 21 Opinion 177 (1938) (copy attached hereto) explicitly found 22 on facts quite similar to those present here that an attorney 23 who represented the licensees of a patent in a suit brought 24 by the licensor may not subsequently represent a third party 25 defendant in an infringement suit brought by the licensor.
26 In that opinion, the licensees specifically claimed that as 27 licensees it was in their best interest to have the validity 28 of the patents upheld. They further claimed that it would

1 be a violation of their former counsel's obligations to them 2 to use information and experience gained in preparation for 3 trial of the earlier case to attempt to invalidate or narrow 4 the scope of the patents in the present action. The opinion 5 stated:

6 "A licensee acquires an interest in the 7 invention and is mutually interested with the 8 owner in sustaining the validity of the patent.

9 "Hence when [the licensees] acquired li-
10 censes, it became to their interest to sustain 11 rather than defeat the patents covered by their 12 respective licenses.

13 "Should [the licensees' former counsel]
14 accept the proffered employment, he would be in a 15 position to employ in the defense of the latter 16 suit the information and experience he had acquired 17 in the earlier suit to the detriment of his former 18 clients, and if successful in establishing the 19 invalidity of the patents he would destroy the 20 value of the license grants for which his former 21 clients had paid substantial considerations and 22 had obligated themselves to pay accruing royalties."

23 The opinion found that Canon Six concerning the 24 obligation to maintain the confidences of a client "clearly 25 forbids" the subsequent representation. This opinion has 26 been frequently cited in subsequent opinions, Informal 27 Decisions C-493 (1961), C-564 (1962), and C-930 (1966), and 28 is referenced in the notes supporting Canon 4 of the present

1 A.B.A. Code of Professional responsibility, i.e., note 4 to 2 Ethical Consideration 4-2 and note 13 to Disciplinary Rule 3 4-101(b) (3) forbidding use by a lawyer of a client confi-
4 dence for the benefit of himself or a third person.

5 Activision's contention that its counsel's repre-
6 sentation of it is consistent with its representation of 7 Atari is shown to be specious by the above Ethics Opinion
8 177. In its representation of Atari, the duty of the Flehr 9 firm was to advance those positions with respect to plain-10 tiffs' patents which were in the interests of Atari. Its 11 duty remained the same both during the prior litigation and 12 after it was settled. It is not contested that Flehr's 13 representation of Atari continued after the settlement and 14 well into 1977 and 1978. Representation of Activision now 15 is not only inconsistent with Atari's present interests, but 16 is also inconsistent with the interests of Atari as they 17 existed in 1977 and 1978 while Flehr indisputably still 18 represented Atari.

19 Activision's contention that there is no threat of 20 any revelation of any Atari confidence by its representation 21 of Activision is equally deficient. When, as here, there is 22 a substantial relationship between the subject matters of 23 the earlier and latter representations, there is an irrebut-24 able presumption of transfer of client confidences during 25 the earlier representation (In re Airport Car Rental Anti-26 trust Litigation, supra, p. 499, n. 3). Moreover, even if 27 the imparted information could be obtained through discovery 28 or public records, this is not sufficient reason for denying

1 disqualification (In re Airport Antitrust Litigation, supra,
2 p. 501; NCK Organization Ltd. v. Bregman (2 Cir. 1976)
3 542 F.2d 128, 133; Emile Industries, Inc. v. Patentex, Inc.
4 (2 Cir. 1973) 478 F.2d 562, 572-573). The Paul affidavit
5 and deposition establish that confidences of Atari were 6 certainly transferred to the Flehr firm. Mr. Herbert in his 7 affidavit neither denies that he or his firm received any 8 confidences from Atari nor asserts that all the confidences 9 which the firm did receive were turned over to counsel for 10 other parties to the prior cases or made a public record in 11 the earlier cases.

12 Activision also contends that Atari is no longer a 13 client of the Flehr firm. The Paul affidavit (par. 9) and 14 deposition (pp. 23-24) show that Flehr has continued to do
15 legal work for Atari. Mr. Herbert's affidavit (par. 15) 16 demonstrates that it was not until February 8, 1983, after 17 this motion was filed, that Flehr attempted to completely
18 terminate its relationship with Atari. That action of Flehr 19 was simply too late to avoid any conflict and, of course, in 20 no way abrogates Flehr's duty to Atari as a former client.

21 B. THE NECESSARY STANDING IS PRESENT.

22 In cases where the conflict of interest and 23 resultant ethical violation is apparent on its face, a court
24 has a plain duty to act to eliminate the conflict (In re
25 Yarn Processing Patent Validity Litigation (5 Cir. 1976)
26 530 F.2d 83, 89). In some cases the conflict can be so 27 egregious that a court may act absent even a motion from the 28 adverse party (Empire Linotype School, Inc. v. United States

1 (S.D.N.Y. 1956) 143 F.Supp. 627, 631). A former client may 2 advocate disqualification even though it is not the formal 3 moving party (Estates Theatre, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures, 4 Inc. (S.D.N.Y. 1972) 345 F.Supp. 93). In Altschul v. Paine 5 Webber, Inc. (S.D.N.Y. 1980) 488 F.Supp. 858, 860, n. 1, the 6 court stated, "Competence to raise disqualification is not 7 limited to former or aggrieved clients," and permitted the 8 defendant to move for disqualification of an attorney 9 representing both the plaintiff and a crossclaim defendant 10 on grounds of differing interests of those two parties.

11 None of the cases Activision relies upon requires 12 that the counsel's former or present client be the party
13 making the motion to disqualify. Earl Scheib Inc. v.
14 Superior Court for County of Los Angeles (1967) 61 Cal.Rptr.
15 386 and Cooke v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County (1978) 16 83 Cal.App.3d 589, 147 Cal.Rptr. 915 state only that the 17 confidences to be protected are ones imparted in an attorney-
18 client relationship. Clearly such a relationship existed
19 between Atari and the Flehr firm. Neither of these cases 20 denied disqualification on lack of standing. Further, in 21 neither of In re Yarn Processing Patent Validity Litigation
22 (5 Cir. 1976) 530 F.2d 83, Krebs v. Johns-Manville Corp.
23 (E.D.Pa. 1980) 496 F.Supp. 40 nor Fred Weber Inc. v. Shell
24 Oil Co. (8 Cir. 1977) 566 F.2d 602 is there any indication 25 that the former client in any way complained about its 26 counsel's representation in the case before the court. In 27 Yarn Processing, the court specifically noted that it could 28 ---

1 not determine the existence of a conflict until the former 2 client made its position known (530 F.2d, 88).

3 The facts here are distinctly different. Atari 4 has made its position openly and well known in this proceed-
5 ing. It is greatly displeased with the Flehr firm's repres-
6 entation of Activision in this action. It is a complaining 7 party. A rule which required Atari to be a formal party to 8 the action in order to have the obligations of its counsel 9 enforced would to a large degree strip those obligations of 10 any meaning. It is quite clear that ethical considerations 11 do not apply only to litigated matters, and it is not 12 necessary to be a party to litigation to enforce such 13 considerations. Moreover, to the extent that this motion is 14 based upon the contractual obligation of the Flehr firm, 15 Magnavox and Sanders are both also parties to that contract 16 with the right to seek to enforce it.

17 C. ATARI HAS NOT CONSENTED TO FLEHR'S
18 REPRESENTATION OF ACTIVISION HERE.

19 Activision appears that the transfer of some 20 undefined files from Atari to the Flehr firm somehow mani-
21 fested Atari's consent to Flehr's representation of Acti-
22 vision against plaintiffs. This argument is untenable.

23 First, it is quite clear that even if there were 24 any such manifestation, it would not relieve the Flehr firm 25 of its obligations. Both Rule 4-101 and Rule 5-102 of the 26 California Rules of Professional Conduct require that any 27 consent from a client or former client to adverse or conflic-
28 ting representation must be written (In re Airport Car

1 Rental Antitrust Litigation, supra, at 500). Activision
2 does not even claim that Atari gave any consent in writing.

3 Second, Activision presents no direct evidence
4 that Atari consented even orally to Flehr's representation
5 of Activision. Mr. Herbert's affidavit makes no reference 6 to any statements made by any official of Atari which 7 supposedly sets forth any such consent.

8 Third, the naked return of files to the law firm 9 that generated those very files can hardly be taken as an 10 indication that those files may be used for any purpose 11 whatever. This is especially true when that law firm is 12 still performing at least some legal work for the party
13 returning the files. The Paul deposition testimony shows 14 that the files were returned with the assumption that they 15 would be used within the customary confines of the attorney-16 client relationship and not for any purpose contrary to 17 Atari's best interests (p. 30). Not even Mr. Herbert's 18 affidavit states that he had any understanding that the 19 files were being returned so that the contents might be used 20 in the course of representing Activision. It would be naive 21 to suggest that Atari would have returned its legal files so 22 that they could be used against its own interests. The 23 Herbert affidavit at most says that the files were being 24 turned over "at the behest of Activision" (par. 17). Even 25 if true, this cannot now be bootstrapped into an expression 26 of informed consent.

27 ---

28 ---

1 D. THE CONTRACT WITH THE FLEHR FIRM
2 SHOULD BE RECOGNIZED AND ENFORCED.

3 The Flehr firm's representation of Activision 4 clearly violates the prior settlement agreement between 5 Atari, Magnavox, Sanders, and Flehr. The Flehr firm is a 6 party to that agreement and any termination of its represen-7 tation of Atari did not abrogate its obligations under that 8 agreement. While the Activision television game cartridges
9 might be usable with Atari game consoles, the manufacture 10 and sale of such cartridges by Activision are the acts of 11 contributory patent infringement which are being complained 12 of here, and those acts are completely independent of Atari.
13 The cartridges are neither made by nor for Atari. Activision 14 is not here being sued for infringement in connection with 15 any sale by it of any television games made by Atari, but 16 only in connection with sale by it of television game 17 cartridges made by it. None of the exceptions stated in the 18 agreement itself apply here.

19 Public policy interests should not prevent enforce-20 ment of this contractual agreement. The agreement does not 21 in any way prevent Activision from contesting the validity 22 of plaintiffs' patents. It merely removes one law firm from 23 the wide spectrum of those available to Activision. While 24 considerations of public policy may dictate that a patent 25 license agreement not estop the licensee from contesting 26 validity of the licensed patent because that licensee is 27 often the principal member of the public with sufficient 28 financial incentive to contest the patent (Lear, Inc. v.

1 Adkins (1969) 395 U.S. 653), such reasoning simply does not 2 logically extend to counsel.

3 Activision complains that the settlement agreement 4 has no time limit. But it does have such a limit. By its 5 own terms it expires with any termination of the Atari 6 license. As a practical matter, it also expires with the 7 expiration of the patents referred to in the agreement.

8 Section 16000 of the California Business and 9 Professions Code is no bar to contracts such as the one here 10 (KGB, Inc. v. Giannoulas (1980) 104 Cal.App.3d 844, 164 Cal.Rptr.
11 571), is not to the contrary. Although containing strong 12 language, it actually extensively considers whether the 13 statute should be applied to the contract before it.
14 Moreover, the cases cited in plaintiffs' opening memorandum,
15 King v. Gerold (1952) 109 Cal.App.2d 316, 240 P.2d 710 16 Gordon v. Landau (1958) 49 Cal.2d 690, 321 P.2d 456 and 17 Boughton v. Socony Mobil Oil Company, Inc. (1958)
18 231 Cal.App.2d 188, 41 Cal.Rptr. 714, conclusively establish 19 that this statutory section is not an absolute bar but is 20 subject to a rule of reason. The narrow restrictions placed 21 on the Flehr firm by this contract are only consistent with 22 the ethical obligations it faces absent the contract and 23 cannot be deemed unreasonable. Certainly this California 24 statute should not be applied to an arms-length agreement, 25 willingly signed by California lawyers in settling Federal 26 litigation in Illinois.

CONCLUSION

In defense of its counsel, Activision belittles the importance of the ethical rules. It argues that A.B.A. Canon 9 concerning avoidance of an appearance of impropriety should be given little consideration. It cites and extensively quotes Westinghouse Electric Corp. v. Rio Algom Limited (N.D.Ill. 1978) 448 F.Supp. 1284, a case which was reversed at Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Gulf Oil Corp. (7 Cir. 1978) 588 F.2d 221. Just as the District Court's failure to give proper respect to ethical considerations was there reversed, Activision's misguided arguments should not be permitted to succeed. Plaintiffs' motion should be granted.

interests in estates, under which the lawyer investigates the interest to be purchased and receives from the layman a share of the interest purchased. The lawyer is to examine the records in the probate court and furnish the layman with names of legatees having an interest which might be secured. Circulars are then issued to such legatees from the office of either the layman or the lawyer. The lawyer is then expected to procure collection by litigation or otherwise.

The opinion of the committee was stated by MR. McCracken, Messrs. Phillips, Arant, Houghton, Brown, Jones and Miller concurring.

This practice offends two of the Canons of Professional Ethics—Canon 10, which prohibits a lawyer from purchasing any interest in the subject matter of litigation which he is conducting, and Canon 28, proscribing the stirring up of strife and litigation. It is true that litigation may never ensue, and that it is not in course of conduct at the time the purchase is made, but, in the opinion of the committee this does not alter the unprofessional nature of the transaction.

In Opinion 51, we held that it was improper for a lawyer to purchase judgment notes, or other choses in action, for less than their face value, with the intent of collecting them at a profit to himself. We said in that opinion:

This opinion, it may be claimed, bars attorneys from entering a speculative field, which might be profitable and which is open to laymen; nevertheless, we feel that the dignity of the profession, as well as the ethics of the situation, are entirely consonant with the view herein expressed.

That language applies to the instant question. While the lawyer does not advance his own funds for the purchase of the interests involved, he participates from the beginning to the end of the transaction. It is his search of the record which discloses the legatees to be approached; he is asked to assist in the approach through circulars or otherwise; he undoubtedly would be expected to prepare and have executed the appropriate documents of transfer and probably make the settlement; and he participates in the profit on some kind of percentage basis. In the event of an attack upon the transaction when the legacy falls in and is collectable, he is in a position of defending himself as well as the purchaser. He thus places himself in the category of voluntary litigants for a profit and makes a business of doing so. It is difficult to imagine any transaction in which the legal training and equipment of a lawyer would be more definitely devoted to commercial purposes.

FORMAL OPINION 177
(February 18, 1938)

An attorney who represented the licensees of a patent in a suit brought by the licensor may not subsequently represent a third party defendant in an infringement suit brought by the licensor.

Formal Opinion No. 177

A, the owner of certain patents, brought a patent infringement suit against B, a retailer of alleged infringing devices. C and D, manufacturers of the alleged infringing devices, intervened. X, a lawyer, was employed to represent B, C, and D in the suit.

After the evidence in chief of plaintiff, defendant and intervenors had been introduced, a compromise was effected under which C and D received grants of licenses under the patents for which each paid a substantial present consideration and obligated himself to pay future royalties.

X actively participated in the consummation of the compromise.

Later A brought an infringement suit on the same patents against E. E sought to employ X to defend the suit for him. C and D objected on the ground that they had taken out licenses; that it was to their interest to have the validity of the patents upheld; and that it would be a violation of X's obligations to them for him to use the information and experience secured in the preparation for and the trial of the earlier suit, in an endeavor in the latter suit either to narrow the scope or establish the invalidity of the patents. X has not been retained by C or D since the termination of the first suit.

May X with ethical propriety accept employment from E in the second suit?

May X do so if he uses only such information as is available from the court records in the second suit?

The opinion of the committee was stated by MR. PHILLIPS, Messrs. McCracken, Arant, Houghton, Brown, Jones and Miller concurring.

A licensee is obligated to pay royalties, is estopped to deny the validity of the patent, and may not assert an adjudication of invalidity as a defense to liability for royalties that had accrued at the time of the adjudication.

A licensee acquires an interest in the invention and is mutually interested with the owner in sustaining the validity of the patent.

Hence, when C and D acquired licenses, it became to their interest to sustain rather than defeat the patents covered by their respective licenses.

Should X accept the proffered employment, he would be in a position to employ in the defense of the latter suit the information and experience he had acquired in the earlier suit to the detriment of his former clients, and if successful in establishing the invalidity of the patents he would destroy the value of the license grants for which his former clients had paid substantial considerations and had obligated themselves to pay accruing royalties.

Canon 6 in part reads:

The obligation to represent the client with undivided fidelity and not to divulge his secrets or confidences forbids also the subsequent acceptance of retainers or employment from others in matters adversely affecting any interest of the client with respect to which confidence has been reposed.

In Opinion 64 this committee, in holding that an attorney cannot properly accept employment to attack the validity of an instrument which he drew for a client, said:

The attorney should not attempt to nullify his own work. He drew the instrument and cannot attack its validity after his client has died and his services are sought by new clients. The death of the former client does not release the attorney from his obligation. The case comes fairly within Canon 6 relating to conflicting interests.

Formal Opinions Nos. 177-178

In Opinion 71 this committee held that an attorney who had represented a municipality in proceedings for the issuance and validation of bonds could not in a subsequent proceeding represent a party undertaking to establish the invalidity of the bonds.

In Opinion 37 this committee held that an attorney who had previously investigated and reported on a title as a public examiner of titles could not thereafter accept private employment in a case wherein issues respecting the same title were directly involved.

See also Opinions 26 and 167.

We are of the opinion that Canon 6 as construed in the opinions above adverted to clearly forbids X accepting the proffered employment.

(February 19, 1938)

It is improper for a creditor's attorney to send papers to debtors which, unless carefully read, will create the false impression that suit has been instituted against the debtor when, in fact, it is a demand for payment.

CANONS INTERPRETED: PROFESSIONAL ETHICS 9, 15
